FAQs on the DCL template and disclosure process

The below questions and answers provide complementary information to the disclosure checklist and disclosure process.

Question	Answer
Why are we introducing the PCAF Disclosure Checklist (DCL) and what exactly is the DCL?	The DCL's purpose is to support our signatories in producing PCAF-aligned disclosures and underpin one of PCAF's central aims: raise the overall quality of disclosures from the global financial industry through awareness raising and standardization. The DCL provides a straight-forward template outlining PCAF's Part A key reporting requirements, allowing signatories to easily track current disclosures against these requirements – it assists in identifying potential reporting gaps/ improvement areas and allows YoY progress tracking.
What are signatories expected to do?	Signatories have the option to submit the completed checklist into the PCAF Secretariat (either through your regional lead or directly to the Technical Assistance inbox at ta@carbonaccountingfinancials.com) along with a (draft or final) disclosure of financed emissions – we encourage signatories to engage with the Secretariat early in your disclosure process should you seek confidential feedback, but it is not mandatory to share a draft of your report before it is public. Please see the disclosure process included in the DCL document for additional details.
Is the DCL generating additional work?	The DCL is expected to be a simple-to-use guide for signatories to align reporting to PCAF's requirements. The DCL is designed as a checklist with room to provide additional comments or justifications. We consider the checklist to be an additional useful tool which should not mean additional work for signatories beyond the time to fill in the form (expectation is no more than 30-40 min.), assuming that all information required for completion of the DCL should already be available in the signatory's (public) disclosure.

What happens if my DCL/disclosure is incomplete?	In the unlikely event of a DCL not meeting the outlined minimum requirements, the TA team will provide detailed feedback on gaps in the DCL. The signatory has the opportunity to address the feedback and share the updated disclosure with PCAF to upload on the website - as per usual PCAF process.
Will my filled DCL become public?	No. PCAF will not upload any completed signatory DCL. We will only publish our empty DCL template to highlight the (review) process that PCAF applies before uploading disclosures on our website. We expect that this process will increase the value of disclosing through PCAF for our signatories.
How will PCAF treat any confidential (draft disclosure) shared in the process of the DCL review?	Information provided in this disclosure checklist and its review by the PCAF Secretariat, including any related communications from the PCAF Secretariat, shall be deemed confidential and will only be accessible by PCAF Secretariat staff. Furthermore, PCAF Secretariat staff shall not use any information submitted in furtherance of any commercial purpose or activity or disclose the information to any person not associated with the PCAF Secretariat.
Are we required to share a draft disclosure prior to publication?	No. Submission of a draft disclosure is not mandatory/ necessary. You can also share final/ already published disclosures with the TA team alongside the populated DCL. However, we encourage signatories to engage early with the TA team in order for the TA team to provide input/ feedback and for the signatory to be able to incorporate the feedback in final disclosures.

If a published disclosure does not fully meet PCAF's reporting requirements, will the signatories be required to republish the report?	If the signatory shares the disclosure with us prior to publication, we can make recommendations to ensure the requirements are fully met. If the report is already published, we would not expect the signatory to republish the same year but to provide justifications for unfulfilled requirements on the disclosure checklist.
Can we consider the review of the disclosure and the DCL by the PCAF TA team as a form of assurance?	No, this is not a form of assurance as PCAF does not have the capacities of an auditing firm. However, the DCL can be considered a form of quality review and a tool to ensure that the disclosures shared on PCAF website have gone through a form of review.
